An explosion of California property crimes — due to Prop. 47

By Marc Debbaudt

March 18, 2016

Congratulations are not in order for San Francisco's latest No. 1 ranking; the city with the highest increase in property crime rates in the United States, according to recently released FBI statistics.

A Chronicle report on the "rampant looting of cars" in San Francisco shined a light on one area of this increase in property crime. Sadly, since Proposition 47 reduced (and for intents eliminated) penalties for many property crimes, cities across California have joined San Francisco in seeing dramatic rises in property crime rates. Proposition 47 and AB 109 are causing an increase in crime in California

Crime is up because of progressive politicians.

There is absolutely no doubt that violent crime and property crime is on the rise in the Inland Empire. Far left radicals are to blame for their dangerous policies and out-of-touch views on society. (source: Fontana Herald)

In the nearly two years since California voters approved Proposition 47, there has been seemingly endless debate over whether it's achieving its purported goals, and what it actually means for public safety.

- Learn About the Potential Public Health Impacts of Proposition 64 on August 11th!

Thursday, August 11, 2016 (10:30am - 11:30am PDT)
Guest Speaker: Rachel Barry

Learning Objectives:

1. Understand how Proposition 64 to legalize and regulate retail marijuana compares to tobacco control policies in California
2. Discuss the potential public health impacts of Proposition 64 as they relate to health disparities using evidence from tobacco and alcohol control.
3. Understand what types of policies that Proposition 64 either permits or prevents local governments from enacting.
4. Discuss policy options for local governments using evidence-based policies from tobacco and alcohol control.
5. Explain the benefits of applying tobacco control strategies to marijuana regulations at the local level.

Rachel Barry is a political scientist with expertise in research and analysis of public policy. In three years working with Professor Stanton Glantz at the University of California San Francisco Center for Tobacco Control Research and Education, Ms. Barry conducted a descriptive analysis comparing regulatory frameworks for retail marijuana in Colorado, Washington, Oregon, and Alaska, and the proposed 2016 statewide ballot initiative in California to document implementation of state retail marijuana laws and law variation over time. Ms. Barry has been on the ground for several years collecting in-depth data and analyzing the characteristics of retail marijuana laws as they relate to best practices from public health research. Her studies show that jurisdictions in the United States are not incorporating public health protections adequately into their regulatory frameworks, thus opening the way for large companies to enter the market.

Why do our youth join gangs? Protection, enjoyment, respect, money, or to make a friend. Many youth are at higher risk of joining a gang if they engage in delinquent behaviors, are aggressive/violent, experience multiple caretaker transitions, have problems at school or live in communities where they feel unsafe and where many youth are in trouble.

In this training participants in the mental health and substance abuse field shall learn to increase self-awareness and awareness of others to raise sensitivity and responsiveness; identify and build protective factors for the individual, families and the community; to understand how early relationships and adverse childhood issues enhance risk factors; and to understand the different worldviews on the culture of gang, law enforcement, mental health and lived experience.
